

WOOD

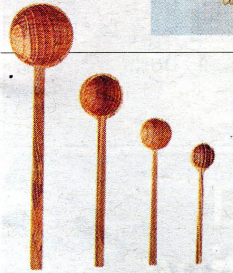

This handsome seat is from Hugh Miller's Coffee Ceremony collection. Dining Chair No 7 is made from British elm, with hand-cut joints, a hand-carved seat and details in brass and Japanese bamboo. £2,450; hughmillerfurniture.co.uk

Created by a natural process that uses the tannic acid in white oak, these unusual black serving boards are produced in the Hudson Valley by Blackcreek Mercantile and Trading Co. £165; thegarnered.com

Handmade in Scotland from wild cherry wood, these measuring scoops can be bought as a set or individually. From £18; minorgoods.com

Add an artisanal touch to your bathroom with Oggetto's close-up mirror. Made from American white oak, it was designed by Lincoln Rivers, creative director of Wireworks, the British design label specialising in bathroom accessories. £72; oggetto.com

A rocking seat in steam-bent oak, the Unstable Stool, by Angus Ross, will be on display at Design-Nation's Marks & Tools exhibition during London Craft Week. £660; angusross.co.uk

The New Craftsmen's covetable homeware edit includes wicker chairs by Gareth Neal and Kevin Gauld (£2,250), pots by Aude Van Ryn (£100) and William Waterhouse's Plumbob Light (from £1,000). thenewcraftsmen.com

TEXTILES

Shown in the vivid Brilliant colourway, Zoe Murphy's Grid cushion features a pattern inspired by the security shutters and shopfronts of Margate, where her studio is based.

Screenprinted by hand, the 50cm square cushion uses environmentally friendly inks on certified organic cotton. £65; zoemurphy.bigcartel.com

Rowenna Mason creates hand-woven textiles at Cockpit Arts, in London. They come in pretty, muted tones, with patterns inspired by urban architecture. From £135; rowennamason.co.uk

Another maker based at Cockpit Arts, Majeda Clarke creates tactile blankets such as these Caernarfon throws, woven in Wales from super-soft lambswool and angora. £320 each; majedaclarke.com

Caitlin Hinshelwood's silk scarves can be worn or hung on the wall as artworks. See her screenprinted, dyed pieces at Heal's Modern Craft Market (until May 7). From £45; heals.com

The Orient sofa, by Elaine Yan Ling Ng, will be displayed at Seeds gallery during London Craft Week. The fabric is hand-woven wool and silk, hand batiked with natural indigo dye; the frame is walnut and the legs are brass. £7,080; seedsindonesia.com

